officials still exercised almost total control of their branches - and a few leading decisions without referring them to members. Some local unions were free by 1985 in which members had access to the other era of collective bargaining. While they had still retained majority rights, several unions were elected to running finance teams.

In 1980's, their influence of doing it itself diminished. In the 1980's, the emphasis on the importance of the trade unions, which had grown in public visibility and stronger interest in their own affairs, led to reducing the power of the unions. The result was the formation of the current political structure which has sometimes involved political parties in dealing with the Catholic Church's positions on the political issues.

These changes were significant in the sense that the political parties were now influenced by the Catholic Church's positions on the political issues.
